"What Are You Giving Up for Lent"

Catholics in the United States and worldwide—just about everyone, really—have been giving up a lot since the coronavirus pandemic struck 11 months ago, with no clearly defined end in sight. You would need the fingers on both hands to name some of the things that have been lost, not to mention nearly a half-million lives lost in the U.S. alone. Maybe this Lent isn't the year to give up something, because we're already doing it involuntarily. Maybe it's time to dig deeper and to think more deeply about what are the lessons that we're learning from this pandemic. For example, how we're treating the earth and about the racism and inequality in our own society and around the world. Lent is a time for renewal, a time for reexamining. Lent is about giving up, but it's a time of renewing, about making some new choices about what can be renewed and what can be recharged.
