RULES FOR DEALING WITH EVACUEE SYNDROME

In 2005, I was Dean of University Ministry at Loyola. Along with the Loyola Residential Life Team, I helped evacuate our on-campus students before Hurricane Katrina. Once we were sure that the students had places to go and ways to get there, we ourselves were evacuated for the duration of the fall semester. I evacuated with other Jesuits to Manresa.

Those were challenging days for everyone, especially for me as a university administrator. I began to observe the people with whom I was working getting more and more stressed out, sometimes so much so that they would just explode and blast everyone in their path. One such incident really hurt me when one of the people to whom I answered as Dean decided to take out all his Katrina frustrations on me. The incident really threw me off balance. So, as I usually do in these situations, I began to write in my journal to sort things out. And in the tradition of St Ignatius Loyola, I decided to write my own “Rules for the Discernment of Spirits” especially designed to address what I began to label as “evacuee syndrome.” I refined my thoughts into six rules” and I shared them with the Loyola University staff. The rules were as follows:

1. Remember the sons and daughters of Israel in the desert – a prime example of evacuee syndrome: grumbling against God and their leaders, grumbling about the food, glorifying the past, and catastrophizing about the future, unable to focus on the present and find God there.

2. Anticipate a daily roller coaster experience in your emotional life.

3. Remember you are not alone, so use that to your advantage by seeking out another person to help you unravel and process your feelings.

4. When you are impacted by someone taking out their frustrations on you, do everyone a big favor and do not pass it along. Be like Jesus on the cross and say the violence stops here.

5. No matter how difficult, try to make some act of faith in the bigger picture, knowing that you may never totally understand it in your lifetime.

6. Pray for actual grace to live today’s challenges.

In conclusion, I want to quote a Jesuit friend of mine, Fr. Si Hendry, SJ, who always says, “Do your emotional homework.” What he means by that is that we need to identify what are our personal issues and how they bleed into the way we relate to people. People who do not do their emotional homework tend to “vomit and run.” You might feel better after the discharge, but others are left behind to clean up the mess.

So, let’s sharpen our emotional IQ’s. That way we can be in a great position to help the people around us who are hurting.

-Edwin Gros, SJ

We plan to start with a fresh new prayer list beginning on the weekend of October 2-3. If you would like to submit a name to be included on the new prayer list, we ask that you please complete our new online form located on our website at www.hnjchurch.org/bulletin-prayer-list.

All names submitted through our prayer form will be included in the bulletin for one month. If the individual needs to remain on our prayer list after one month, we ask that you please submit a new form.

If you need assistance or are unable to complete the online form, please call the church office at 504-865-7430 and we will be glad to take your request over the phone.
