PASTORAL THOUGHTS...

The Two Groups Who Leave

People leave the Catholic Church for many reasons, and there are two main groups I have found, and you, my readers, are the people often called to help them. The first group is "I don't feel anything." Many lifelong Catholics are in this category, and unfortunately, many converts find themselves lapsed Catholics very quickly after the excitement of Baptism. It is easy to follow God in the excitement; when He splits the Red Sea and battles the Egyptians. It is difficult to follow Him in the boring desert. God is easily mistaken for His mighty works, and we can easily mistake religion for feelings. When believers find themselves in this category of not feeling anything, my recommendation is what the Israelites did in the desert in their boredom and hunger for God; tell God your hunger. God rained down manna from heaven to feed His people, only after they "grumbled" (Ex 16:2-3). A quick way for these people to come back is prayer and Confession; the easy avenues for us to "grumble" to God our deepest needs.

It is worth noting that the people in this first category often leave religion entirely, or often go to another religion that fulfills their desire to "feel" God. Entertainment, guitars, and great sermons might "feel" great, but at the end of the day, the Eucharist is God. Feelings are not God. The love of the 50th-anniversary couple should be deeper than the romantic feelings of the newly wed. So also with God: He is after the mature and deeper love of a true relationship, all the spice and excitement in the beginning is directed toward that deeper love and commitment of the relationship down the road. Spice should cook into lasting flavor, not burn out in the pan. It might be helpful to point out to people who have fallen away that God wants to be known in a relationship, not the loneliness of always getting our "fix" of feelings.

The second category is more delicate, because "something bad happened." In the first, people quit because they don't feel anything, in the second, people feel too much, and usually they feel pain. Often people enter this category when a clergy person lets them down or hurts them, or perhaps it was just a feeling that God let them down in some way. My recommendation here with these folks is to listen and encourage. The only way back is through healing. Ironically, when we suffer the deepest spiritual pains, we often avoid the only One that can heal it. Therefore, encourage a person in this category to go to a spiritual father, namely a priest. It is the duty of a priest to offer spiritual healing and support. As kids we would go to a parent when something was really wrong, so we go to our spiritual fathers and Mother Church. In Christ, Fr. Weller
