Reflections on the abuse saga: It's not just about McCarrick

By Ines San Martin (of CruX magazine)

In recent days, I've found myself diving deeply into the drama that the Catholic Church is living in Chile amid one of the most colossal clerical sexual abuse crises ever to erupt in that country.

It's disgusting. It's criminal. It's unforgivable. It has the capacity to undermine one's faith. ... my faith has been tested. I've cried for the victims, for the Church's inaction, for the Communion of Saints.

Let me be clear: What Bishop McCarrick (Baltimore Archdiocese) also did is awful. What the hierarchy in the United States did to cover up for him is revolting. Why on earth a man with not one, but two, legal settlements for sexual misconduct was allowed to remain a cardinal for almost two decades is something many will have to explain when they come knocking on St. Peter's gate.

But as revolting and awful as what happened in the United States is, it kills me to know it's not unique. What happened in Boston has happened in Ireland, Australia, Chile and many other places sadly. And it'll get worse still. But it will get better. It has to. I don't know how, when or what "better" will look like.

I do know that it will only happen when we're capable of leaving ideologies aside.

It will happen when we leave pride aside and acknowledge that this is not the press coming after the Church. Some of us are doing what we do with the encouragement of cardinals (we hope) we can trust.

It will get better when we stop saying "everyone knew" (apparently everyone but the U.S. bishops, in McCarrick's case, based on what they've claimed in public once the scandal broke) and actually do something about it.

It will get better when we, as a Church (yes, I'm a baptized Catholic, and despite the crimes and sins I heard this past week, I still went to Mass on Sunday) stop leaving it up to the "hierarchy" to fix it.

Studies tell us that anywhere between 3 to 7 percent of priests are part of the problem. That's a huge number. But the number of priests, bishops, nuns, religious and popes who want to be a part of the solution is even bigger. Find them. Support them. Be proud of them. Pray for them. Let the rest rot in hell.

FAITH

Psalm 34 tells us that God is close to the brokenhearted and crushed in spirit. How have you experienced that truth?
