CONVERSATIONS ON the Journey

This weekend's scripture readings give us a lot to think about. And hopefully those thoughts will challenge us to become more free to serve others and to be better followers of Jesus.

St. Paul tells us that we were called for freedom, but he warns us of how we use it. St. Paul says that we should not use our freedom as an opportunity for the flesh but as an opportunity to serve one another.

A great spiritual practice is to review our day each evening. We can ask ourselves:

- How did I use my freedom today? Did I use it for myself or for others?
- Who did I serve today and how did I serve them?
- Did I miss an opportunity to serve someone today?
- Who will I see tomorrow whom I can serve?

In the Gospel from Luke this weekend, we get advice from Jesus on when we should use the freedom we have and when we should be open to further conversion.

Jesus essentially says, stop finding excuses to delay or put off following him. It's so easy to say "tomorrow" I will change. Like... Tomorrow I will be a better follower of Christ. Tomorrow I will love that hard to love neighbor.

This reminds me of a quote attributed to St. Augustine. He said, "Lord make me pure, but not yet!" I think Jesus would say to him, No Augustine, start following me better today!

Taking the first step to change is hard! Start small and pray for strength from the Holy Spirit, and that first small step can lead to a change to true freedom. And when we are living true freedom, we will be more effective in drawing people to Christ.
