Here is a piece from the Wall Street Journal dated 10-27-22 by Kathleen Porter-Magee

“From the beginning of the pandemic, American Catholic schools have shown how community focused, mission driven leadership can benefit children. In the Fall of 2020, 92% of Catholic Schools across the country re-opened for in person learning.

The National Assessment of Educational Progress showed in October of 2022 how important reopening was for learning. Today, the divergence between Catholic schools and public ones is so great that if all U.S. Catholic schools were a state, their 1.6 million students would rank first in the nation in reading and math tests for fourth and eighth graders.

Catholic-school students now boast the nation’s highest scale scores on all four NAEP tests. The average score among 4th graders in Catholic schools was 233, 17 points higher than the national public school average, or about 1.5 grade levels ahead. In eighth grade reading, the average score for Catholic school students was 279, 20 points higher than the national public-school average, or about two grade levels ahead.”
