THIRD SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

“Jesus reads aloud from the scroll of the prophet Isaiah and announces that this Scripture is now fulfilled.” Luke 1:1-4; 4:14-21

Prepare For Next Sunday’s Readings

In next Sunday’s Gospel, (January 30) the people are surprised but not immediately offended by Jesus’ words in the synagogue. It is the words that follow his reading from the prophet Isaiah that seem to offend them. Jesus challenges and provokes the people of Nazareth by referring to examples in which Israel rejected the prophets. He also challenges them to respond to his message, the message of a prophet, in a way that is different from their ancestors. This call for a new response leads to his rejection. After Jesus’ words of challenge, Luke reports that there was a movement to kill Jesus by throwing him over a cliff. Jesus walks away from the crowd that intended to kill him; it is not yet his time. The animosity of the people of Nazareth prefigures and prepares the reader of Luke’s Gospel for the cross. Luke wants all to understand that it is through his death on the cross that Jesus offers God’s salvation to all.

Route 66

This one time only change for the title of my bulletin comments is inspired by the recent anniversary of my nativity. It was Bishop Paprocki actually who suggested that I might celebrate by taking a drive on "Old Route 66." This will be as close as I get for a while. Did spend a few days last week in rural Cobden (home of the 1964 Amazing Appleknockers of single class state basketball tournament fame) with Fr Seth Brown. Cobden is conveniently located near Murphysboro, the Illinois BBQ capital. I was able to make a considerable dent in a large stack of accumulated reading material.

In light of this week of prayer for Christian unity, a highlight of my reading was an article by George Weigel on the difference Christianity has made in our world. In pre-Christian times the hope of immortality was centered on our physical offspring. We would primarily live on through our family. Christ stressed the hope of individual life after death. We have value not as members of any certain demographic (sex, social class, ethnicity) but as individuals. In calling us to render "unto God the things that are God's" (Matt. 22:15-21), Christ reminded us that if there are things of God's that are not Caesar's, then Caesar is not God. State power is limited through the sanctuary of human conscience.

Christianity taught us that heroism is not restricted to any elite. Christian martyrs continue to come from every social class, age, and occupation. Achievement is not limited to the accumulation of power or athletic prowess. Conquering of the will can be the greatest achievement. Seeking the voice of God within rather than the cheers of the crowd is the greatest journey.

St. Benedict and the rise of monasticism reminded the world through their motto "Ora et Labora," prayer and work, that human labor has great dignity. It is not just for slaves and servants. Our labor is called to model the creativity of God himself. The self-governing rule of law, modeled by the monastic rules of life, where leadership was typically selected by a universal vote, anticipated self-government. St. Augustine's great classics The City of God (taught that we are responsible to transcendent Truth while living in the world) and his Confessions, (the first modern autobiography) modeled a self-criticism that has been essential in the development of science and modern democracies. By refuting that the natural world is controlled by "spirits" and demigods Christianity helped science to develop. It is no coincidence that modern scientific theories in such fields as genetics and astronomy were developed by Catholic monk/priest scientists (Mendel & Lemaitre). The western idea of the university is a product of Catholic Christianity.

It was the "investiture controversy" of the 11th and 12th centuries, helping to establish the right of the Church to choose her own leadership without government interference that laid the groundwork for the concept of religious freedom. As Britain's chief rabbi Jonathon Sacks wrote: the "self-evident truths of the Declaration of Independence (life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, i.e.) are anything but self-evident. They would have been unintelligible to Plato, Aristotle, and every hierarchical society the world has ever known. They are self-evident only to people (Jews and Christians) who have internalized the Hebrew Bible." There would be no human rights today without the legacy of Mt. Sinai and the meaning of the history of Jerusalem. Amidst our confusing times let us continue to pray, study, and work for the unity our Lord intended when He prayed that "all might be one."

Ad Orientem

Every Sunday at our Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception in Springfield, when Bishop Paprocki is at home, he celebrates the 10:00 A.M. mass ad orientem. An increasing number of our diocesan priests celebrate the mass ad orientem from time to time as well. The phrase means towards the east. For practical purposes it does not have to mean compass point east, but "liturgical east." Churches were built with the nave and altar facing east for many centuries. Later when church properties did not always allow for eastern facing churches, towards the east has come to mean toward the altar (and usually the crucifix and tabernacle as well). Liturgical east here at IC and St C would actually be north. At the Cathedral it would be west.

For nineteen centuries mass was celebrated with the people and the priest facing the same direction. The liturgical changes after Vatican II (1962-1965) allowed mass to be celebrated facing the people, but the Council did not mandate that priests do so. In fact, the rubrics (directions for the priest on how to offer the mass) direct the priest when to turn and face the people. The rubrics assume the mass is celebrated ad orientem.

Eastern Rite Catholics and the Orthodox continue to face east for the celebration of the Liturgy. Judaism and Islam take it for granted that we should pray toward the "rising sun," the central place of Revelation: toward Jerusalem and the land holy to all three of the world's great monotheistic faiths.

When mass is celebrated ad orientem the priest faces the people when speaking to the people. When the priest is praying to God on behalf of and with the people, he is facing toward the "east," toward the crucifix, and the tabernacle. At these moments the priest and the people are all are facing toward God together.

As I talked about on the Feast of the Baptism of the Lord, as the priest offers the Eucharistic sacrifice in the person of Christ, all the faithful unite their sacrifices with the sacrifice of Christ and offer them spiritually with the priest. At an ad orientem mass all are united in the sacrifice of Christ as the interior and spiritual orientation of the mass is reflected and manifested by the physical posture of priest and people facing God together. The ordained priest participates in this action of the Lord as head, while the assembly participate in the same action as the Mystical Body. It is one Christ who offers and is offered in the mass.

At other moments of the mass, such as the homily, when the priest addresses not God the Father, but the assembly, he faces the people. To speak of the priest with his back to the people can be seen as an insult to the lay faithful. It makes it sound like it is only what the priest is doing is important. The lay faithful are not just watching the liturgy unfold. The priest is not the center of what is happening. Jesus Christ is. We do not say the people in the front pew stand with their backs to all the people in church behind them. When the ad orientem posture is used, all face the same direction together because all share in the same sacred action. The priest is not a performer and the Baptized are not spectators. The mass unites us together in a one act of worship directed toward God.

As a way of our parish, along with myself, becoming more familiar with this form of the Roman Rite which is growing throughout the U.S., I will begin to celebrate our 8:30 A.M. First Saturday mass ad orientem. Pray we will all be open to the work of the Holy Spirit among us. Deo Vindice, fr john
