The Right Way to Ask and Receive

In our second reading this weekend from James, it states that wars happen based on our misguided desires. "You covet but do not possess. You kill and envy but you cannot obtain; you fight and wage war. You do not possess because you do not ask. You ask but do not receive, because you ask wrongly, to spend it on your passions."

I once had a professor at UW-Madison who had a simpler way of saying this: "You can't buy beer you can only rent it". This applies to many other objects during this era of consumerism; the joy we get in buying something dries up quickly as we are aggressively sold something 'better'.

The remedy for this is to be open to a broader range of emotions beyond our passions or being happy. Chapter four of the Letter of James aligns with St. Ignatius of Loyola as it calls us to see the world as it is even to the emotions of sadness, grief and being soulful. Ignatius calls this "the gift of tears". It's like our favorite sweatshirt that has been at sporting events, family work groups, church retreats, and the side of a hospital bed. When we put that sweatshirt on again this fall it brings with it all of those emotions along with attention to the people and situations we are about to encounter.

Jesus continues to talk to us about the combination of death and resurrection. His disciples keep asking who is the greatest. Jesus pulls forward small children who are so transparent – whatever they feel they express. Children don't separate their true feelings from their public persona as adults often do.

Therefore, let us ask according to our real feelings and let us receive reality as a gift - even with its tears. Then we will be freed from envy and war.

Blessings,

Fr. Michael Erwin
