FROM THE SHARED PASTOR’S DESK: (CONT.)

2.) Wondering About Religion – A good number of fine people wonder why religions, meant to be a source of comfort, truth and joy, can cause so much conflict and pain, especially with so many different ones making what seem to be so many different claims. Why is this, especially if there is truly One God Who is Father of all and we are all His children? In considering this always contemporary concern, I like to compare religions to diamonds; each one will be of a great value to the person who finds it; in their natural/rough state, every diamond requires refinement, some cutting and a polishing, in order to reveal their many facets and greater brilliance. Every religion contains glimmers, partial truths, and portions of God’s wisdom. The Catholic Church believes that God has fully revealed Himself by sending His Own Son and that there will be no further revelation after Him; He is God’s definitive Word. We also believe that God has entrusted the fullness of His truth to us in all its richness, the Holy Spirit guiding, instructing, and keeping the Church as a whole from erring on matters of faith and morals. This doesn’t mean that individuals and small groups of people who are part of any religion cannot misapply, misinterpret or misunderstand the truth that God has made available to everyone through created things, Scripture and Tradition. The fact of many religions is a mystery. It has something to do with human freedom as well as the natural conditions of human religious and cultural development. For thousands of years the main human groups lived in relative isolation from each other – Europe, Asia, Americas and Africa. Today we experience life in a more interconnected way than ever. As this interconnectedness is a relatively new experience in human history, there are various tensions and violent conflicts between people based on differences that aren’t yet understood. Religion should be a source and force for greater harmony and justice, and has responsibility to be a way in which people can come together. All conflict between religions should be avoided as that destroys both credibility and authenticity. Only dialogue, involving mutual learning, can open religions up to each other so people can learn to exist together in diversity and understand one another better. This is not a matter of denying differences but learning what they really amount to. Dialogue doesn’t exclude witnessing to one’s faith, inviting others to recognize what we have come to know as true and valuable. Believers of every variety should identify issues on which shared, believing witness is possible, together with a genuine search for unity, in humble submission to God’s will; His will is neither to lose nor reject anyone, for we all came from Him, and are destined to return to Him.
