+ Dear Parishioners, In your charity, please keep in prayer Joseph Michels, a 3 year old boy who is currently being treated at a hospital in Minneapolis for Leukemia. He was air lifted here from his home state of North Dakota, and has had a surgery, has been on a breathing tube, and has had many complications to his treatments for leukemia. On coming to the area for treatment for Joseph, his parents found All Saints and have been coming here for the Sacraments.

Joseph has been feeling pretty well the past two days, but the doctors have not been very hopeful. They told his parents, Brian and Kristie, that they don't expect him to survive this.

Brian and Kristie told the doctors they aren't giving up and that there is still hope and they believe that God can work a miracle. They are asking for more prayers specifically asking for Blessed Columba Marmion's intercession for the miraculous healing of Joseph.

Joseph's other brothers (4 of them) are on the train coming here and are going to arrive this morning. It sounds like the hospital will let them in to see Joseph.

Please storm heaven for this little boy and his devout family!
Blessed Columba Marmion, pray for us!

Keeping All These Things

A Weekly Bulletin Reflection from the Filiae Laboris Mariae Sisters

Reflections on the Sacred Heart of Jesus:

My Jesus, What is It to be Loved By You?

Sister Marie-Immaculée

A beautiful little wood-carved shrine to the Sacred Heart hangs outside the chapel door in the convent. We received it as a Christmas gift from a new friend of our community who builds them in his carpentry work (www.mamwoodworking.com). In the image of our shrine, the Lord is holding His flaming Heart of Divine Love outstretched to each passerby. His message is spoken without words: "For you, My child, My love. For you. Will you receive Me?" God holds out His Heart to me. God holds out His Heart to you. Wonder of wonders.

In response, my heart begs the question: My Jesus, what is it to be loved by You?

We cannot fathom the richness of God's love for us. A little tour of salvation history casts a ray of light on its breathtaking depth and beauty. God, complete in every respect, chose to create human beings from nothing in order that we might share His life of love in the Holy Trinity for all eternity. In response to this astonishing privilege, the entire human family, in the seed-form of Adam and Eve, abandoned God. Humanity struggled from the arms of God, like a disgruntled little one struggles away from his mother. How did Love reply? How did the Father respond to the shocking impudence of His unruly child, now wounded and weakened from such a great fall? In this dismal moment of ruin and helplessness for the human family, God launched a new pursuit of love for mankind, even more wonderful than our creation: our redemption. He would come after us. He would be ours, and we would be His, no matter the cost. He would establish covenants, He would send prophets, He would crown kings to rule in His stead, and in the fulfilment of it all, He would send His own Son: "Et Verbum caro factum est." Yes, God would become flesh to redeem us. He would become flesh to dwell among us. He would become flesh to offer us His Heart.

This love that He offers is a markedly personal love for each one of us. The Lord of all power and wisdom chose to create your soul and my soul over an infinite number of other potential souls. God does not run out of creativity. Your existence is unquestionably intentional by God. He wants you to be in heaven with Him for all eternity, for it was you He chose to create and to redeem. St. Bernard sums up the great privilege of our position when he says: "For all the riches and all the glory of the world, and whatever else it possesses which the human heart may desire, all this is little, yea, it is nothing at all in comparison with the honour of being sought after by God."

My Jesus, what is it to be loved by You? It is to be desired, by God, from all eternity. It is to be deemed, by God, worth dying for. It is to be offered, by God, the flaming Heart of Jesus Christ, our great High Priest and our All.

Jesus, meek and humble of Heart, make our hearts like unto Thine.

FINAL THOUGHT - Homily 22 on the Gospel of John by St. John Chrysostom

It is no slight question which is proposed to us also today. For first, when the mother of Jesus says, They have no wine, Christ replies, Woman, what have I to do with you? Mine, hour is not yet come. And then, having thus spoken, He did as His mother had said; an action which needs enquiry no less than the words. Let us then, after calling upon Him who wrought the miracle, proceed to the explanation.

The words are not used in this place only, but in others also; for the same Evangelist says, They could not lay hands on Him, because His hour was not yet come John 8:20; and again, No man laid hands on Him, because His hour was not yet come John 7:30; and again, The hour has come, glorify Your Son. John 17:1 What then do the words mean? I have brought together more instances, that I may give one explanation of all. And what is that explanation? Christ did not say, Mine hour is not yet come, as being subject to the necessity of seasons, or the observance of an hour; how can He be so, who is Maker of seasons, and Creator of the times and the ages? To what else then did He allude? He desires to show this; that He works all things at their convenient season, not doing all at once; because a kind of confusion and disorder would have ensued, if, instead of working all at their proper seasons, He had mixed all together, His Birth, His Resurrection, and His coming to Judgment. Observe this; creation was to be, yet not all at once; man and woman were to be created, yet not even these together; mankind were to be condemned to death, and there was to be a resurrection, yet the interval between the two was to be great; the law was to be given, but not grace with it, each was to be dispensed at its proper time. Now Christ was not subject to the necessity of seasons, but rather settled their order, since He is their Creator; and therefore He says in this place, Mine hour is not yet come. And His meaning is, that as yet He was not manifest to the many, nor had He even His whole company of disciples; Andrew followed Him, and next to him Philip, but no one else. And moreover, none of these, not even His mother nor His brethren, knew Him as they ought; for after His many miracles, the Evangelist says of His brethren, For neither did His brethren believe in Him (John 7:5). And those at the wedding did not know Him either, for in their need they would certainly have come to and entreated Him. Therefore He says, Mine hour is not yet come; that is, I am not yet known to the company, nor are they even aware that the wine has failed; let them first be sensible of this. I ought not to have been told it from you; you are My mother, and renderest the miracle suspicious. They who wanted the wine should have come and besought Me, not that I need this, but that they might with an entire assent accept the miracle. For one who knows that he is in need, is very grateful when he obtains assistance; but one who has not a sense of his need, will never have a plain and clear sense of the benefit.
