Reflections from Fr. Peter Kieffer

How Would You Describe Yourself?

Back in my twenties I learned about different kinds of personality assessments.

The first assessment I learned about was the four temperaments. According to the book The Temperament God Gave You by Art and Laurie Bennett, this assessment claims that every person has at least one of the following four temperaments: sanguine, choleric, melancholic, or phlegmatic.

People with the sanguine temperament tend to be very social, “the life of the party,” so to say. They are very comfortable interacting with other people and, on the surface, are usually in a joyful mood. They also have a lot of energy.

There are some weaknesses to having a sanguine temperament. It can lead to acting in an overly impulsive and superficial way. It can also make it difficult to keep paying attention in situations that require persistence and attention to detail.

People with the choleric temperament tend to be on the extroverted side. They are confident, decisive individuals, who know what they want and are not afraid to take charge in a situation. They tend to have natural leadership skills and see that jobs get done from start to finish.

There are some weaknesses to having a choleric temperament. It can cause people with this temperament to enjoy being in control a little too much. It can lead to being argumentative and stubborn. It can also cause people with this temperament to struggle with unhealthy kinds of anger.

People with the melancholic temperament tend to be on the introverted side. They are reflective individuals who can spend quite a bit of time pondering and reflecting on a topic. They tend to be creative, artistic, thorough, and organized.

There are some weaknesses to having a melancholic temperament. People with this temperament may start to overthink topics and have difficulty in making decisions. Individuals with this temperament also can be prone to anxiety and perfectionism.

People with the phlegmatic temperament tend to be on the introverted side. They are calm and pretty laid back. Phlegmatics are not likely to be the loud storytellers at a party. Phlegmatics can be perfectly content working on a repetitive task for a long period of time. They are great under pressure and are excellent mediators during conflict.

There are some weaknesses to having a phlegmatic temperament. It can make it more difficult to have motivation both to start projects and to finish them. Those with this temperament can sometimes be so laid back that they let things go when they really should speak up about something.

No one temperament is better or worse than another. Each has its own strengths and weaknesses.

The second personality assessment I learned about was the Myers-Briggs Personality Assessment. This assessment looks at the following four questions:

First: are you extroverted, or are you introverted? Are you an E or an I? By extrovert the assessment means: do you get more energy by socializing and being around other people? By introvert the assessment means: do you get more energy during your down time or during time by yourself?

Second: are you an intuitive person or a sensing person? Are you an N or an S? By intuitive the assessment means: when assessing a situation, do you see the whole picture in all of its complexities? By sensing the assessment means: when assessing a situation, do you tend to focus just on the people and information right in front of you at the time, rather than all of the other complexities that are part of a situation?

Third: are you a thinking person or a feeling person? Are you a T or an F? By thinker the assessment means: when making a decision about something, do you tend to assess the situation more by reason, facts and what you think about something? By feeling person the assessment means: when making a decision about something, do you tend to assess the situation more by your feelings and how you feel about the situation at the time?

Fourth: are you a judging person or a perceiving person? Are you a J or a P? By judger the assessment means: when making a decision, do you tend to form opinions pretty quickly? By perceiver the assessment means: when making a decision, do you tend to take your time, wanting to take a while before coming down one way or the other?

Now it is your turn. What is your temperament? How would you answer the Myers-Briggs questions?
