Friends,

I can't think of too many things I enjoy less than going to the doctor. I don't think I'm alone in this phenomenon. But when I reflect on the excuses I make to avoid the doctor's office, it so often comes down to pride. It's not really that bad. Maybe it will just get better on its own. Maybe I can just look up how to treat it online. I don't have time to be sick, let alone fix it. Sometimes shame can even creep into these excuses and we try to cover up our pain lest anyone discover how hurt we really are.

Sinfulness is often the same way. Much like most of the illnesses or woundedness in our bodies is not self-inflicted, so too it is with most of the woundedness of our soul. Our sinfulness is often the result of wounds and pains that have been afflicted on us from the outside. The cliché, "hurt people hurt people" rings so true. In fact, I believe that there are very few truly evil people in the world. However, there are numerous hurt people that hurt others by lashing out in their pain. Notice the excuse we use to avoid the confessional...a place where this pain can be healed. We think that our sins aren't that bad. Maybe it will get better on its own. Maybe I can just look into a program to treat it. Sound familiar?

Notice how we adjust to disability, whether it is physical or spiritual. Just as the farmer that lives in constant back pain becomes accustomed to it to the point he doesn't even recognize how good it would be not to have it, so too our sinfulness can become so familiar that we simply become so used to it that we can't imagine how good it would feel to be rid of it.

Additionally, it is really the height of pride to think we can fix our sinful habits on our own. If we could have changed them by ourselves, wouldn't we have done so already?

Of course, shame plays a more prominent role with the woundedness of our souls than it does with the woundedness of our bodies. All too often we buy into the lie that we can only be loved when we do good things. Yet, if God could change, He would not be God, which is why His love for us can't change either. Yet we can become so convinced of this lie that our sinfulness becomes so overwhelmingly shameful that we refuse to expose it to the Divine Physician in the Sacrament of Confession by pretending it is either not that bad or that we can fix it ourselves.

I think this is part of the reason why Jesus reminds us that "nothing is concealed that will not be revealed." This terrifies me. I'm perfectly comfortable with everyone knowing that I'm a sinner. I'm incredibly uncomfortable with the idea of everyone knowing EVERY sin I've ever committed. The only reason for this shame is that I don't trust that others could love me if they knew what I've done.

This lack of trust is a huge problem. How often do we believe that our spiritual wounds are irredeemable, incurable and will plague us forever? How often do we buy the lie that God prefers to punish us rather than cure us? What is this but a lack of trust in the Divine Physician?

This is why Jesus, after reminding us that there is no way of hiding our sinfulness from anyone, let alone God, reassures us of His love for us. In one of the funniest lines in all of the gospels, Jesus is going to say, "Be not afraid. You are worth more than many sparrows!" Gee, thanks a heap Jesus. That makes me feel so loved given that two sparrows are sold for a penny. But, to accentuate the depth of what Jesus is saying, He also reminds us that even the hairs on our head are counted. Do any of us know how many hairs are on our heads? Do any of us care? What does that mean that God loves us more than we love ourselves and God knows us better than we know ourselves? He's fascinated with us, obsessed with us, enthralled by us. Clearly, He only wants to help. Curing the spiritual woundedness that infects our soul is precisely why He sent His Son into the world.

Of course, just like a medical doctor might give us a regimen to fix our physical affliction that is difficult and changes our lives more dramatically than we'd like, so, too, God, the Divine Physician, might prescribe something similar. However, unlike the medical doctor, there is no limitation to either God's knowledge or God's love. We know the prescription will cure us because we know the Divine Physician loves us.

Blessings, Fr. EJA
