Friends,

One of the many benefits of being a Catholic priest is that I will never again have to interview for a job. This is a blessing, not because interview requires a lot of work, but rather because of the stress of having to maximize your strengths and minimize your weaknesses, presumably without lying.

I was reminded of this unease as I was praying about the story of the Pharisee and the tax collector in the gospel of St. Luke. In this gospel, the Pharisee seems to think that he is interviewing for a job as he recites his prayer to God. He starts by sucking up, then he moves to boasting and then finally slams his competition; all in the same sentence. "O God, I thank you that I am not like the rest of humanity; greedy, dishonest, adulterous; or even like this tax collector here." Next, the Pharisee gives the list of his impressive accomplishments. "I fast twice a week, and I pay tithes on my whole income." Wow, which of us can say that? If what he is saying is true, he has the position he is striving for in the bag.

Especially when we look at his competition. For the man the Pharisee is competing with is a tax collector. Tax collectors were considered the lowest form of life. Not only did their influence with the Romans allow them to cheat people out of their money and get away with it, but also, they were viewed as traitors to their Jewish race as well.

One can almost picture the disdain of the Pharisee as he overhears the "interview" of his perceived competition. There is no sucking up, no listing of credentials and no belittling of competition. In fact, all the tax collector says to God is, "O God, be merciful to me a sinner." Yet, the tax collector is the one that goes home forgiven, while the Pharisee does not. Why?

There are several reasons, but the most obvious is also the most important. His pride gets in the way. This obvious answer is a little more subtle than it may appear. For the reason the Pharisee doesn't think of himself as a sinner is because (1) either he thinks he doesn't sin, which means he's not only proud but also delusional, or (2) he thinks that his good works make up for any sins he has committed.

This second idea is extremely dangerous. Even the least sin incurs an infinite debt owed to almighty God. This is why the greatest saints perceive themselves as the most wretched sinners. As they grow in holiness, they realize more and more that even the tiniest sin they might have committed, or more likely, omitted, can never be made up for by the totality of their good actions. Not even the combined works of Mother Theresa paid even the slightest portion of the debt she owed to God because of just one of her smallest venial sins. Thus, when the Pharisee gives God his resume, he walks away unjustified. No matter how much good he has done, the only way he walks away from God justified is by asking for forgiveness.

Yet, I often wonder how many of us fall into this very trap. How often do we give God our resume instead of asking for His mercy? I see this in the confessional all the time. Or, perhaps more accurately, I rarely see it the confessional at all. For at a time when I think all of us would agree that the world is awash in wickedness, scarcely anybody receives the Sacrament of Confession anymore. Think there might be correlation?

I think one of the biggest reasons so few people make a regular Confession is that we are more like the Pharisee than we care to admit. It's not that we think we don't sin, but rather that our sins aren't that big of a deal or that the good we do makes up for them. It is only in humbling ourselves through the confession of our sins, that God can exalt us by forgiving our sins

Blessings,

Fr. EJA
