Black Christ of Esquipulas Will be Celebrated at Holy Ghost on Sunday January 15th at 11:30 AM

For many people in Central and South America, the pilgrimage to the Black Christ of Esquipulas begins well in advance of the January 15 festival. Quite a number of Indians make the journey to Esquipulas—located in southeastern Guatemala along the borders with El Salvador and Honduras—entirely on foot, and look down upon those pilgrims who travel by horseback or in cars. Many don wide-brimmed straw hats, to which they attach gray Spanish moss and chiches (breasts), a yellow fruit that resembles a gourd. Indians making the journey from Quezaltenango blacken their hands with the juice from a special fruit. Folk belief teaches that this act aids Christ in enduring his pain. Prior to the Spanish Conquest, Indians came to site of modern-day Esquipulas for religious rituals and trade. Once the Spaniards arrived the chief of the local tribes, whose name was Esquipulas, comprehended that it would be useless to resist the Europeans and decided instead to cooperate with them. The Spaniards honored him by founding a town which bore his name. They also built a Roman Catholic church and hired a well-known artist to sculpt a statue of Jesus. Since the local Indians thought that all Europeans were wicked, the priests requested that the artist carve the statue from balsam wood, a wood whose color was close to that of the natives' skin. Over the 400 years that have elapsed since then, the statue has darkened to black due to constant exposure to candle smoke and incense. Many legends involving answered prayers and miraculous cures have enhanced the Black Christ's reputation.

Ceremonial sites resembling altars, built from rocks brought by pilgrims, are scattered through the hills surrounding Esquipulas. The pilgrims stop to pray at these sites in their journeys to and from Esquipulas.

Only Quiché Indians from western Guatemala—believed to be the only Indians in the country who have not intermarried with whites—can perform some of the sacred rituals associated with this pilgrimage, such as dressing the image of the Black Christ. The pilgrimage is a good example of a Christian ritual that is closely tied to the practices of an indigenous population.

Cristo Negro de Esquipulas - 15 de enero

Para muchas personas en América Central y del Sur, la peregrinación al Cristo Negro de Esquipulas comienza mucho antes de la festividad del 15 de enero. Un buen número de indígenas hacen el viaje a Esquipulas —ubicado en el sureste de Guatemala en la frontera con El Salvador y Honduras— completamente a pie, y miran con desdén a los peregrinos que viajan a caballo o en carros. Muchos usan sombreros de paja de ala ancha, a los que les agregan musgo español gris y chiches (pechos), una fruta amarilla que se asemeja a una calabaza. Los indios que hacen el viaje desde Quezaltenango se ennegrecen las manos con el jugo de una fruta especial. La creencia popular enseña que este acto ayuda a Cristo a soportar su dolor.

Antes de la conquista española, los indios llegaban al sitio de la actual Esquipulas para los rituales religiosos y el comercio. Una vez que llegaron los españoles, el jefe de las tribus locales, cuyo nombre era Esquipulas, comprendió que sería inútil resistir a los europeos y decidió en cambio cooperar con ellos. Los españoles lo honraron fundando un pueblo que llevó su nombre. También construyeron una iglesia católica romana y contrataron a un artista muy conocido para esculpir una estatua de Jesús. Como los indios locales pensaban que todos los europeos eran malvados, los sacerdotes pidieron que el artista tallara la estatua en madera de bálsamo, una madera cuyo color era similar al de la piel de los nativos. Durante los 400 años transcurridos desde entonces, la estatua se ha oscurecido hasta volverse negra debido a la constante exposición al humo de las velas y al incienso. Muchas leyendas que involucran oraciones contestadas y curas milagrosas han mejorado la reputación del Cristo Negro.

Los sitios ceremoniales que se asemejan a altares, construidos con rocas traídas por los peregrinos, se encuentran dispersos por las colinas que rodean Esquipulas. Los peregrinos se detienen a orar en estos sitios en sus viajes hacia y desde Esquipulas.

Solo los indios Quiché del oeste de Guatemala, que se cree que son los únicos indios del país que no se han casado con blancos, pueden realizar algunos de los rituales sagrados asociados con esta peregrinación, como vestir la imagen del Cristo Negro. La peregrinación es un buen ejemplo de un ritual cristiano que está íntimamente ligado a las prácticas de una población indígena.
