Friendship

Natural prudence together with the supernatural gift of counsel are so important in maintaining good virtuous friendships and listening to the Holy Spirit through those virtuous friends.

Take a look at the following 3 classic categories of friendship from Aristotle, friendships of utility, pleasure, and virtue. Which of those of 3 do most of your “friendships” fall into?

Friendship of Utility

The first type is a friendship of utility, one based on some benefit or advantage found in the relationship. Business relationships, group projects in class and other transactional exchanges often fall under this category. Think about your favorite coffee shop: You go there because you enjoy the coffee, and the coffee shop serves you because they make money. You might get to know the people working there. They might sincerely take an interest in your life and engage in friendly conversation with you. These basic levels of friendship are common in life. But the relationship is primarily built on the benefit the coffee shop receives from you (business) and the benefit you receive from the coffee shop (good coffee).

Friendship of Pleasure

The second type of friendship is friendship of pleasure, one based primarily on the fun times two people share together. For example, two people might happen to live near each other, play on the same team, visit the same restaurant or belong to the same parish. They might like the same music, the same sports team, the same television show or the same party scenes. These kinds of friendships are based primarily on the fun they have spending time with each other.

While these first two types of friendships are not bad in themselves, Aristotle notes how they are the most fragile and least likely to last the test of time, because these friends are not committed to the other as a person, seeking what’s best for them. These friends are more committed to the benefit, pleasure or fun time they get from the relationship. For example, when your classes or interests change, you shift roles or locations at work or you are no longer involved in the same activities or frequenting that particular coffee shop, your friendship is not likely to continue. The benefit or fun times are no longer there, so unless there’s something deeper uniting you, you are unlikely to share a deeply committed friendship.

While these basic forms of friendships are common in life, especially when we are young, it’s important to know that they often dissolve when life grows difficult and the friendship no longer brings the enjoyment, fun times, benefit or convenience that the other person is looking for. You can probably think of examples of these kinds of friendships in your own life and how quickly some of them have come and gone.

Virtuous Friendship

According to Aristotle, the third kind of friendship is friendship in the fullest sense. He calls it virtuous friendship. This is based on something much deeper: The friend is committed to you and your good, not just to some benefit or enjoyment that they receive from being with you. The virtuous friend loves you in the true sense of the word: They seek what is best for you, which is to live a virtuous life in imitation of Christ and eventually live forever with him in heaven. As Christians, this is the highest form of fellowship and should be our aim in our own friendships.

For a virtuous friendship to develop, both people must be striving for virtue. They don’t need to be perfect, but they do need to be pursuing the virtuous life together. They also need to be involved in each other’s lives. Simply clicking “friend” on social media or interacting through screens is not how virtuous friendships form. In Christian friendships, when both people are striving to deepen their relationship with God and live like Christ, they help each other in what matters most in life. A true friend wants you to live out your faith to the fullest. Because of this, it is essential for you to find brothers and sisters in Christ who can help ensure that your faith not only survives but thrives.
