VATICAN CORNER

...continued So how did the world end up with Vatican City, the smallest country, which you can walk around its perimeter in about 40 minutes? Well the army of Italy and King Victor Emmanuel III had forced the pope and his army into the Vatican and then for 59 years from 1870 to 1929 five popes remained voluntarily secluded in the Vatican and refused to legitimize the Italian government or its rights to the Papal States, which covered an area of approximately 3 million people. Benito Mussolini, prime minister for King Emmanuel III recognized that 97% of Italy was Catholic and the majority of the Italians wanted peace with the Church. He decided it made sense to find a way to rule in harmony with the Church. After two and a half years of negotiations, Mussolini and Pope Pius XI signed the Lateran Treaty and Lateran Pacts named after the Lateran Palace where the signing took place. Among the agreements, the Holy See acknowledged the legitimacy of the Italian government and its right to the Papal States, with Rome as the capital of Italy. The Vatican was financially compensated with the equivalent of about $92 million dollar. Vatican City was created and designated a sovereign nation, independent from Italy, with the pope the head of state. Catholicism became the religion of Italy; marriage laws were placed under the rule of the Church, and Catholic religious training was included in every school. Italy agreed to build and fund a train station, a telephone and telegraph office, a radio station and a post office for Vatican City. Certain buildings outside the Vatican walls that were traditionally part of the Church were returned to the Church. As a precondition to the agreement the destruction of the Catholic Italian Popular Party was required. Pope Pius XI disliked political Catholicism because he could not control it and he believed that democracy would be brought into the Church. The end of the Catholic Italian Popular Party caused Catholic to move to the Fascist Party, and as a result, the collapse of democracy in Italy. As part of the Treaty, the Catholic clergy was not to take part in any Italian politics and each bishop would have to take a vow so stating. The nomination of new bishops was to be reviewed by the Italian government. Mussolini and others were convinced that by the Lateran Treaty isolating the pope's rule to Vatican City and its 109 acres, it would greatly reduce the pope's influence on political issues. But instead the pope today is considered both a world leader with considerable influence and a spiritual leader of Roman Catholics encompassing over a billion people. He is hugely popular and widely influential among Catholics and non-Catholics. The Vatican has been able to promote its doctrines all over the world, influencing international bodies such as the United Nations and it has participated in many world conferences on social and economic issues, conflict negotiations and treaties. Even though there have been revisions to the original Lateran Pacts, they remain in effect even today. An Italian comedienne discovered in 2008 that her joke about the Pope was an offence covered under the Lateran Pacts. It could have brought her five years in prison for public insults against the pope, but in the end she was forgiven.
