VATICAN CORNER

Pope Francis is releasing a new book on January 14, 2025 titled “Spera” (Hope). According to the Italian newspaper – Corriere della Sera that has received an early viewing, the book reveals that during Francis’ visit to the city of Mosul in Iraq in March of 2021, there were warnings of two very serious threats from Isis against the Pope’s life. Before that trip he was advised by many not to go to a land ravaged by jihadism and extremist violence. The trip was also during the COVID-19 pandemic, making it more dangerous. However, the book says that Francis said “I wanted to go at all costs. I felt I had to do it”. He felt an obligation to visit and meet “our forefather Abraham,” from whom Jews, Christians, and Muslims all trace their lineage. Francis also says in the book that he did not want to disappoint the Iraqi people. Twenty years prior, Pope John Paul II had wanted to visit Iraqi, however Iraqi’s President Saddam Hussein had rejected the visit. When Pope Francis landing in Baghdad, Vatican security was informed that British intelligence had discovered that there was a young female suicide bomber headed to Mosul with the intention of blowing herself up during the Pope’s visit. Also there was a speeding truck launched for the same purpose. Despite these threats, the Iraqi trip continued as planned. Francis viewed Mosul from a helicopter and was greatly saddened by what he saw. The historic old city with its centuries of tradition and civilization, once a place of coexistence with great qualities, had now been reduced to ruins from the three years when it was held by ISIS. But he was able to meet with the Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Sistani, and that “filled his soul with joy and honor” making the visit worthwhile. The day after he met with the Ayatollah he asked the Vatican security commander about those threats against him. The commander said that “they no longer exist” without giving details. There have been other threats against Pope Francis during his papacy, but thank God none of them came to pass. In 2013 there were mob threats against Francis because of his efforts to confront corruption and to modernize the Vatican bank. The Maffia had laundered money and made investments for years with the complicity of the church, and Francis was dismantling that system, which made the mafia “very nervous” and Francis a target. In 2015 before the Pope’s visit to the US, a 15-year-old New Jersey Boy, influenced by material online from ISIS, had allegedly made a detailed plan which included multiple assailants, firearms and explosives that he threatened to use during the Pope’s visit. Also In 2015 four alleged terrorist sympathizers from the Balkan county of Kosovo made internet threats against Pope Francis, and the police said “the four propagated the ideology of jihad through social networks”. They were arrested, and two were expelled from Italy. In 2024 seven people making “terror threats” online against Pope Francis in cities around Jakarta, Indonesia were arrested before the Pope’s visit there. For 25 years, terrorist attacks attributed to groups related to al-Qaida and ISIS in Indonesia killed hundreds of people, particularly foreigners. Pope Francis has said that he must adhere to strict security measures due to the potential for danger, and this limits his ability to interact with people freely. Despite his messages of courage and faith, he has acknowledged experiencing personal fears, particularly related to his safety. In an Italian newspaper interview in 2015, Pope Francis said he accepts the risk that he could be assassinated – but prays to God that he would not suffer if the terrifying scenario were to occur. “ I have said to the Lord: take care of me. But if your will is that I should die or that they do something to me, I ask you one favor: that they don’t hurt me.”
