Philippines was one of the top contenders to succeed Pope Francis after his death in April 2025. At the Conclave, Cardinal Robert Francis Prevost (Pope Leo XIV) was ultimately elected Pope. The two have known each other for many years and worked together closely as the head of their respective Vatican departments. Some call Cardinal Tagle “the Asian Francis” having a reputation as a liberal and committed to social justice and progressive causes. Cardinal Tagle (67), nicknamed Chito, has been in the priesthood for over 40 years. He studied theology at the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C. and he is fluent in English, Italian and his native Tagalog. He was made Archbishop of Manila in 2011 and named cardinal by Pope Benedict XVI in 2012. In 2019 Pope Francis brought him to the Vatican to lead the Church’s missionary section. Tagle originally planned to become a doctor, but he says jokingly that his young priest friends “tricked” him into the seminary with promises of scholarships that would ease his parent’s financial burden for schooling. Cardinal Tagle had many Catholics and Non-Catholics believing he could be the next pope, and had much support across the world. When asked about being considered a candidate for pope, he said “As someone who does not enjoy being put in the limelight, I found the attention rather unsettling.” He said he “tried to muster spiritual and human strength in order not to be affected. “This included meditation on the words of apostolic constitution, “on the grave duty incumbent on (the Cardinals) and thus on the need to act with right intentions for the good of the Universal Church.” Tagle had participated in two Papal conclaves, one in 2013 where the late Pope Francis was elected and now in 2025 where Pope Leo XIV was named. He recalled the moment where all participating cardinals had to take an oath as they cast their ballots. He said that seeking the good of the church is not seeking for wins or losses. “It is clear that there are no ‘candidates’ in the worldly sense of political elections, where a vote for one is a vote against another.” Regarding his praise of Pope Leo, Cardinal Tagle said he has a deep and patient capacity for listening and engages in careful study and reflection before making a decision. The Pope expresses his feelings and preferences without imposing them. He is intellectually and culturally well-prepared, but without showing off. In his relationships, Pope Leo brings a calm warmth, shaped by prayer and missionary experience. Pope Leo’s multicontinental and multi-cultural background will surely help him in his ministry and benefit the Church. The people of Asia love the Pope as Pope, whichever country he comes from. He is loved not only by Catholics, but also by other Christians and followers of non-Christian religions. Cardinal Tagle told of an event that occurred in the Conclave, moments before the cardinals chose Cardinal Prevost as Peter’s 267th successor. He and Prevost were sitting together and Cardinal Tagle noticed the anxious expression on Cardinal Prevost’s face when the votes were leading up to Prevost’s election and he was sighing deeply. Tagle reached into his pocket and offered him a piece of caramel. “I always have a bag of sweets. ‘Do you want a sweet? He said ‘Okay, give me one.’ And Tagle joked, ‘That’s it, this is my first act of charity for the new pope’”. The late Pope Benedict XVI had a saying about his moment of sighing when the votes were accumulating in his Conclave, he called it the “guillotine lowering.” At the inauguration Mass for Pope Leo, Cardinal Tagle was given the task of placing the Fisherman’s Ring on Leo XIV in what was the most emotive moment of the Mass. The new Pope Leo on May 24, 2025, as a sign of trust, gave the title of Cardinal of Albano to Cardinal Tagle, the Prefect of the Dicastery for Evangelization, which was Leo’s seat as cardinal before becoming Pope.
