LITURGY CORNER

From the very beginning those who believed Jesus was the Christ gathered together weekly on the first day of the Jewish week, the anniversary of his being raised from the dead. This special day was reckoned by early Christians from sunset to sunset, as were all days according to Jewish custom. The first Christian assemblies were, therefore, most probably in the evening of the Sabbath Day. At first there seems to have been two assemblies. On Saturday (Sabbath) morning, Christians came together for a service of the Word and prayer modeled on the Synagogue practice. Then, probably Saturday evening (1 Corinthians 11:17-24) beginning the first day of the week, those who believed Jesus was the Christ would gather in one of their homes, a primitive house-church, for a meal, probably the full Sabbath meal. This meal would have included blessing a Eucharistic cup and a special blessing of the bread. In the early 2nd century, this Eucharistic ritual was moved to before dawn on Sunday, the first day of the week. The service became a combination of the Word and Eucharistic ritual. The Service of the Word could now serve as an introduction to the Eucharistic ritual. By now the Eucharist had been separated from a regular meal. By the year 165, this Sunday ritual already had a form that would be recognized by Catholics today as Sunday Mass. The importance of Sunday is captured by the name given to it before the turn of the first century. In Revelation 1:7 it is called “the Lord’s Day” and fittingly calls to mind Christ’s kingly glory earned through his death and resurrection. The Lord’s Day remains the Church’s official title for Sunday.
